Trial on Ventura County Law Is Closer

The state Supreme Court has rejected Ventura County's appeal of its lawsuit aimed at overturning a local public safety funding ordinance, raising the likelihood that a dispute over specific provisions of the law will proceed to a costly trial.

On a 5-1 vote, the justices declined to review the constitutionality of the 1995 ordinance. Ventura County Superior Court Judge Henry J. Walsh had declared the law legal and the 2nd District Court of Appeal declined in September to review that decision.

Wednesday's notice was a blow to the Board of Supervisors, which had hoped an early decision on contested issues surrounding the ordinance would save taxpayers the expense of a trial.

Supervisors will meet in a special closed session today to consider their next step,

County fund formula flawed, says Bennett

PUBLIC SAFETY:
Board newcomer wants supervisors to have the last word.

By Charles Levin

New county Supervisor Steve Bennett said Wednesday that the controversial formula that siphons money from the general fund to help pay for public safety threatens the long-term fiscal stability of the county.

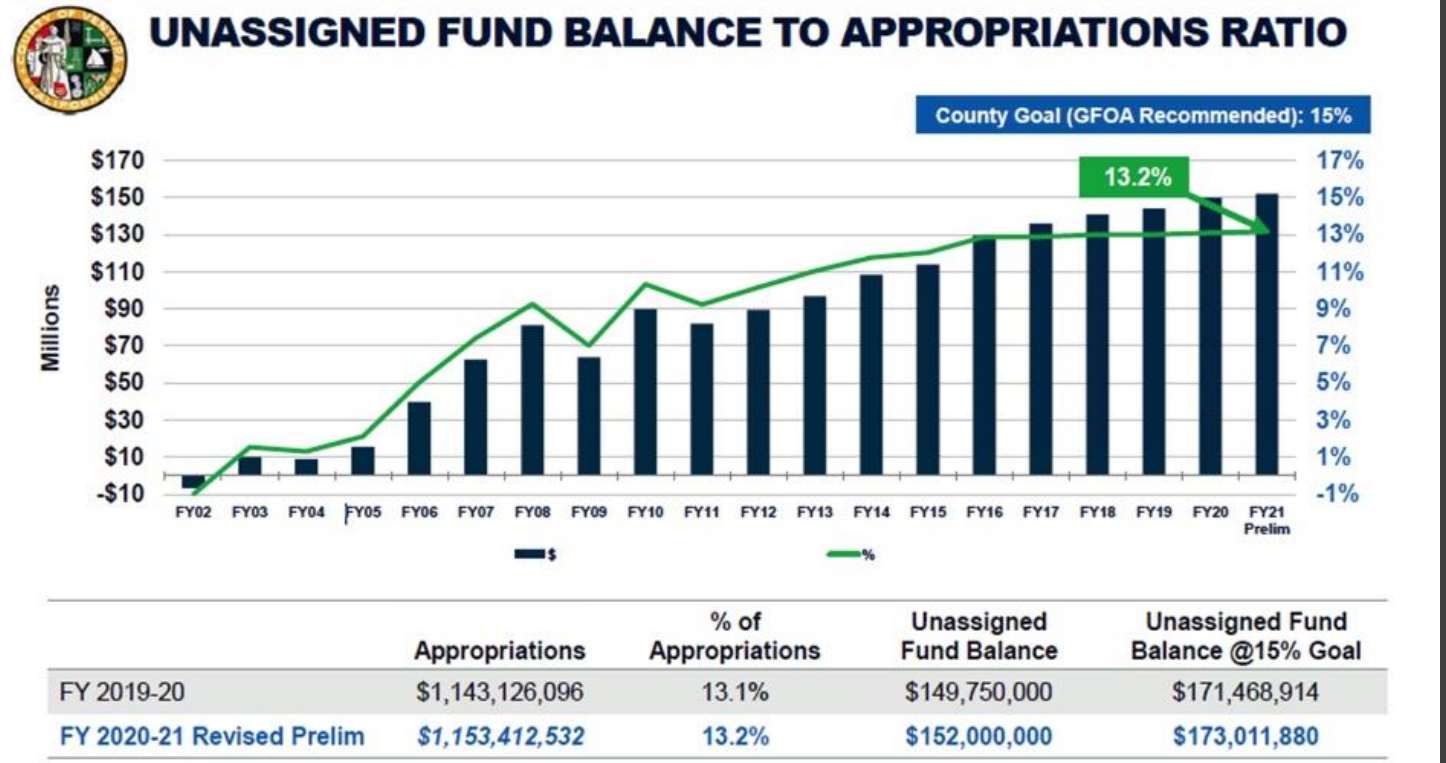

Speaking to the Ventura County Star's editorial board Wednesday, Bennett became the first supervisor to openly criticize the funding formula in the county's Ordinance 4088.

The 1995 law ensures that a half-cent sales tax approved by voters statewide as part of Proposition 172 goes to the sheriff's, district attorney, public defender and probation departments.

The ordinance also lets those agencies dip into the county's general fund to handle

SUBJECT: ADOPTION OF AMENDMENTS TO ORDINANCE 4361- VENTURA COUNTY
CAMPAIGN FINANCE REFORM ORDINANCE

RECOMMENDATION:

Read Ordinance in title only and continue final adoption to January 6, 2009

DISCUSSION:

Having been in effect for eight election cycles, the Ventura County Campaign Finance Reform Ordinance has successfully eliminating the flow of large contributions from a single source. Electronic filing of reports has been smoothly implemented by candidates and has provided a useful information source for the press and public. The last two election cycles
