All new oil and gas expansions and drilling must be approved using new standards with new permits. Oil and gas companies must not just assume they can expand and drill and frack without permits that require environmental impact study. The antiquated permits that still exist, some of them decades old, are being misinterpreted and exploited. Environmental standards and requirements have changed in the last 70 years. There are new environmental dangers, and operating on old permits should not be allowed. The continued use of old permits to exploit the situation will just further pollute our county and nearby counties and exacerbate our climate crisis. We are all on this earth together, and everyone needs to do their part to protect the planet and the people living upon it.
